“All human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights……”

(Universal Declaration of Human Rights (1948), Article 1)

“Everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth in this Declaration, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status”

(Universal Declaration of Human Rights (1948), Article 2)

Since the approval of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in 1948, the United Nations has been at the frontline of the struggle against racial discrimination. Through declarations, conventions, conferences, the establishment of international observances and other actions it has been able to achieve considerable progress worldwide, the greatest victory perhaps being the end of apartheid in South Africa in 1994. However, when the Third World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance met in Durban, South Africa in 2001, it had to recognize that many problems still subsisted. The Conference identified people of African descent as a specific victim group who continued to suffer racial discrimination stemming from the historic legacy of the transatlantic slave trade. It is estimated that 200 million of people of African descent live in the Americas and many more around the world. The Conference acknowledged that their human rights needed to be promoted and protected at the national and the international level.

Paragraph 7 of the Durban Programme of Action (2001) specifically requested “the [UN] Commission on Human Rights to consider establishing a working group or other mechanism of the United Nations to study the problems of racial discrimination faced by people of African descent living in the African Diaspora and make proposals for the elimination of racial discrimination against people of African descent”.

The Commission on Human Rights established the Working Group of Experts on People of African Descent with resolution 2002/68. The Working Group is tasked not only with studying the problems of racial discrimination faced by the African diaspora, but also to make proposals to remove obstacles to their full integration and human development in society.

The Working Group’s proposal to establish an International Decade for People of African Descent 2015-2024 was approved by the General Assembly on 23 December 2013, by resolution 68/237.

This exhibition at UNOG Library retraces the efforts of the United Nations to eliminate racial discrimination and, through documents and books from the collection, it elaborates on the three topics the Working Group has selected as the main themes for the International Decade:

JUSTICE, RECOGNITION AND DEVELOPMENT

DEVELOPMENT

The draft Programme of Action...considers development for people of African descent in two ways. Firstly, the role that people of African descent have played in global development must be recognized both in terms of the contribution that the African continent has historically made... and continue(s) to make to the development of nations. Secondly, in a period of economic and financial crisis, a human rights-based approach should be integrated into all development activities where the realization of rights including the fight against poverty and access to education, health, employment and political participation are the goals of development.
